The journey, read top to bottom.

Mood, twice over.

The landscape board is three parallel column-grids; you can't make a stage label group its task rows in CSS. So portrait emits a different shape — and encodes mood redundantly so it survives a glance.

Row wash — pain warm, delight cool. The emotional arc is the first thing you see.

A `mood=1` task is then unmistakable: a pink row with the face pulled to the edge.

The win isn't shrinking the journey to fit — it's giving the vertical canvas its own composition, where the emotional arc runs down the page and the worst moment is the one your eye lands on first.
