Panes · story

A photo pane on a tall deck

On a 9:16 deck two panes do not fit side by side, so each becomes its own page. The image page draws its photo in the image layout's panel.

The site, then the plan

The site, then the plan

The hall opens in May →

The site, then the plan

WHAT CHANGES

The hall opens in May

Two floors move in June →

The site, then the plan (cont.)

WHAT CHANGES

Two floors move in June

A tall photo, then the numbers

A tall photo, then the numbers

42 desks →

A tall photo, then the numbers

THREE NUMBERS

42 desks

6 meeting rooms →

A tall photo, then the numbers (cont.)

THREE NUMBERS

6 meeting rooms

1 roof garden →

A tall photo, then the numbers (cont.)

THREE NUMBERS

1 roof garden

The square shot

The text pane comes first here

The square shot

BEFORE THE PHOTO

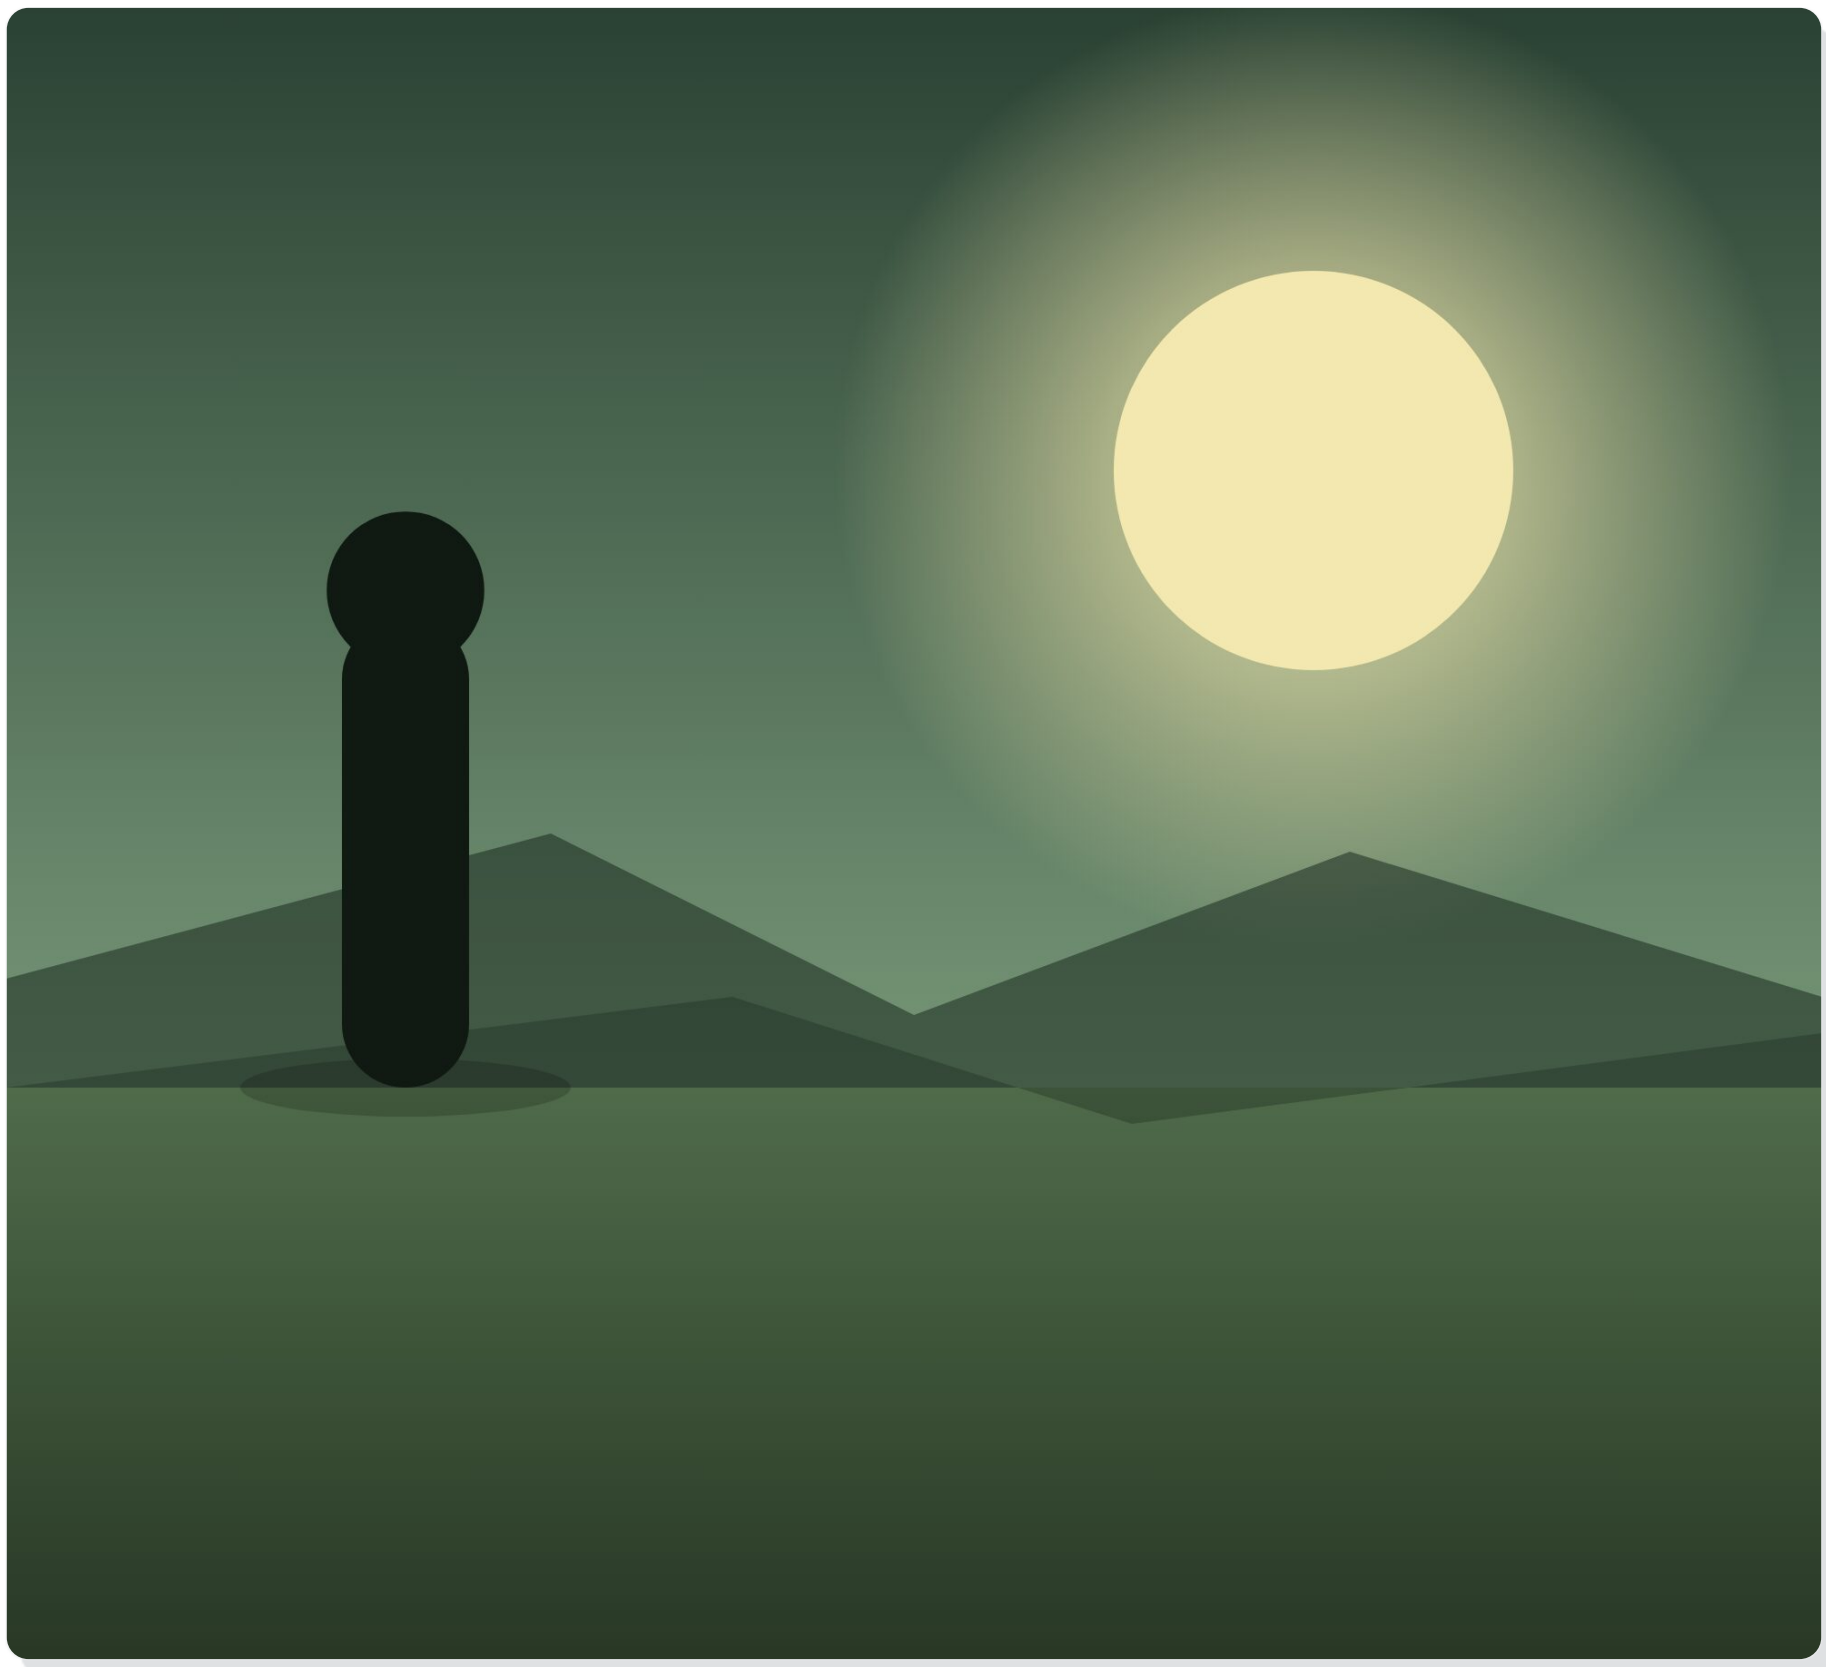

The text pane comes first here

The image page follows it →

The square shot (cont.)

BEFORE THE PHOTO

The image page follows it

The square shot

A plain image slide, for comparison

The same panel, written as one slide.

What changed

What changed

A split image pane draws its photo in the panel

continues →

What changed (cont.)

It used to fill the whole page behind the text

continues →

What changed (cont.)

A wide deck lays the same panes out side by side, as before