Structural Text Tokens

Eyebrow, subtitle, caption, table header, sub-label and attribution — each on its own AA-tuned token

Part 01 · Light canvas

Light mode — every secondary element on the brand canvas.

Section 01 · Eyebrow + subtitle

Heading at full ink weight.

Subtitle line — secondary ink, set in italic

Body text at full strength for comparison. The eyebrow above and the subtitle line read as deliberate secondary ink — clearly legible, clearly subordinate to heading and body.

- Headline point
  - supporting detail in nested form

KPI labels and the footnote both use secondary ink.

The best product does not win. The most understood product does.

Crepuscolo · secondary + label tiers, light & dark

Clarity is a product decision, not a marketing one

If a prospect cannot articulate our value in one sentence, the product has a communication-architecture problem.

Understanding drives retention at scale

Users who grasp the system's logic stay through friction. Build for comprehension.

NET REVENUE RETENTION

114%

Measured across all customers active for 12+ months. The unit-label eyebrow and the caption both use secondary ink.

Existing customers grow faster than we lose them

Every churned dollar is offset by $1.14 in expansion.

Expansion is concentrated in three segments

Enterprise accounts upgrade at twice the SMB rate.

Part 02 · Dark canvas

Dark mode — the same elements via the light-dark() pairs.

Section 02 · Eyebrow + subtitle

Heading at full ink weight.

Subtitle line — secondary ink, set in italic

Body text at full strength for comparison. On the dark canvas the eyebrow and subtitle resolve to the dark side of the secondary pair automatically — still AA, still on-brand.

- Headline point
  - supporting detail in nested form

KPI labels and footnote on the dark canvas.

The hierarchy holds on both canvases.

Secondary ink stays legible and on-brand — light and dark
