The key belongs below the dial.

On a tall deck the four keyed charts used to letterboxe into a short band — the diagram and its right-rail legend are one wide SVG unit. In portrait the legend now stacks beneath the diagram, so the whole chart fills the box.

Same chart, restructured for the box.

These four charts bake the diagram and its legend into one `<svg>` `viewBox`, so CSS can't reflow the key. The fix is render-time: the kernel emits the legend below.

Landscape is untouched — byte-identical to before. The right-rail layout runs when the deck isn't portrait.

Portrait stacks — dial on top, key centered below, a soft accent rule between them.

Author nothing new. The same Markdown adapts to the `size:` you render at.

The legend-below layout is gated on the deck's orientation, so a 16:9 boardroom deck renders exactly as it always did — while the same source, exported to a story or mobile size, fills the tall canvas instead of stranding the chart in a band.
