ENGINE · SPLIT-ENVELOPE.JS

A split run keeps the deck's finish on every page it emits

The cover used to lose it. Every page after this one is a split run, and every page wears the finish.

The plain split: a cover, then one point per page

The cover keeps the deck's registers

The plain split: a cover, then one point per page

- The cover keeps the deck's registers
  - Finish, stamp, corners and the rest of the surface registers ride across the class swap.

The body pages always did →

The plain split: a cover, then one point per page (cont.)

- The body pages always did
  - They add a class rather than replace the list, so they never lost anything.

CAROUSEL · SPLIT-PANEL

Every page of a carousel run is re-authored, so every page was bare

The supporting detail →

Every page of a carousel run is re-authored, so every page was bare

The cover uses its own ink

Accent on an accent field vanished. The cover's ink reads.

The points pages sit on the canvas →

Every page of a carousel run is re-authored, so every page was bare

The points pages sit on the canvas

They draw it in the accent, like any slide.

CAROUSEL · A TINTED PANEL

A category tint is a canvas too, and names its own ink

The supporting detail →

A category tint is a canvas too, and names its own ink

The canvas is the tint

The finish mixes toward the panel fill, not the deck ground.

The ink is the tint's text color →

A category tint is a canvas too, and names its own ink

The ink is the tint's text color

The same ink the panel's headline already uses.

DECISION · A PER-SLIDE FINISH

A slide's own finish wins over the deck's, across the split too

The reasoning →

A slide's own finish wins over the deck's, across the split too

Carry the slide's preset

This run is strata, not atrium. The cover and both points pages agree.

Drop the deck's preset →

A slide's own finish wins over the deck's, across the split too

Drop the deck's preset

The same slide-over-deck rule the engine applies before the split.

FINISH ON COVERS

One run, one finish — on the cover, the carousel and the body.
