STATEMENT · CANVAS · PROSE

quote

A pulled quotation, centered, with attribution.

> A quotation earns the whole slide, or it does not belong on one.

— the quote layout, stating its own rule

The difference between a senior engineer and a staff engineer isn't what they ship — it's how they think about what to ship.

THE QUESTION THIS FRAMEWORK ANSWERS

bare · quote bare — No card, no quotation marks — a plain display-scale line.

> This is the longest quotation the layout will treat kindly: about forty words, three lines at the reduced scale, enough for one complete thought with a turn in the middle — and not one clause more than a listener can hold.

— quote · stress, at the forty-word ceiling

> A quotation earns the whole slide, or it does not belong on one.

— the quote layout, stating its own rule

> A quotation earns the whole slide, or it does not belong on one.

— the quote layout, stating its own rule

> A quotation earns the whole slide, or it does not belong on one.

— the quote layout, stating its own rule

When NOT to reach for quote.

Paragraph-length quotes

If the quote runs past 25 words, the slide is reading like a wall of text. Trim aggressively or use `split-panel pullquote` (gives the quote half the slide alongside spelled-out implications).

Multiple quotes per slide

Two quotes on one canvas dilute both. The whole point is that one quote earns the whole slide. For a montage of customer voices, use successive quote slides.

Decorative quotes

If the quote could be paraphrased without losing anything, the slide doesn't need to be a quote slide. Move the idea into `content` and skip the chrome.

RELATED COMPONENTS

See also.

`split-panel` — the quote needs implications spelled out alongside it

`content` — the language is paraphrasable — let prose carry it

`big-number` — the most memorable thing is a metric, not a phrase