

A band keeps the middle of the photo clear.

The card stretches the full width along the bottom edge. The heading takes the left column and the text takes the right, so the strip stays short.

The same strip along the top.

Soft backing lets the sky show through, and whatever sits below the strip stays in full view.

On a statement, the scrim becomes the band.

The title steps down one size to fit its column, and the scrim fades out sooner than it does for a corner card.

Dark words on a light strip, top edge.

`ink-dark` flips the scrim light, so a bright sky carries dark type.

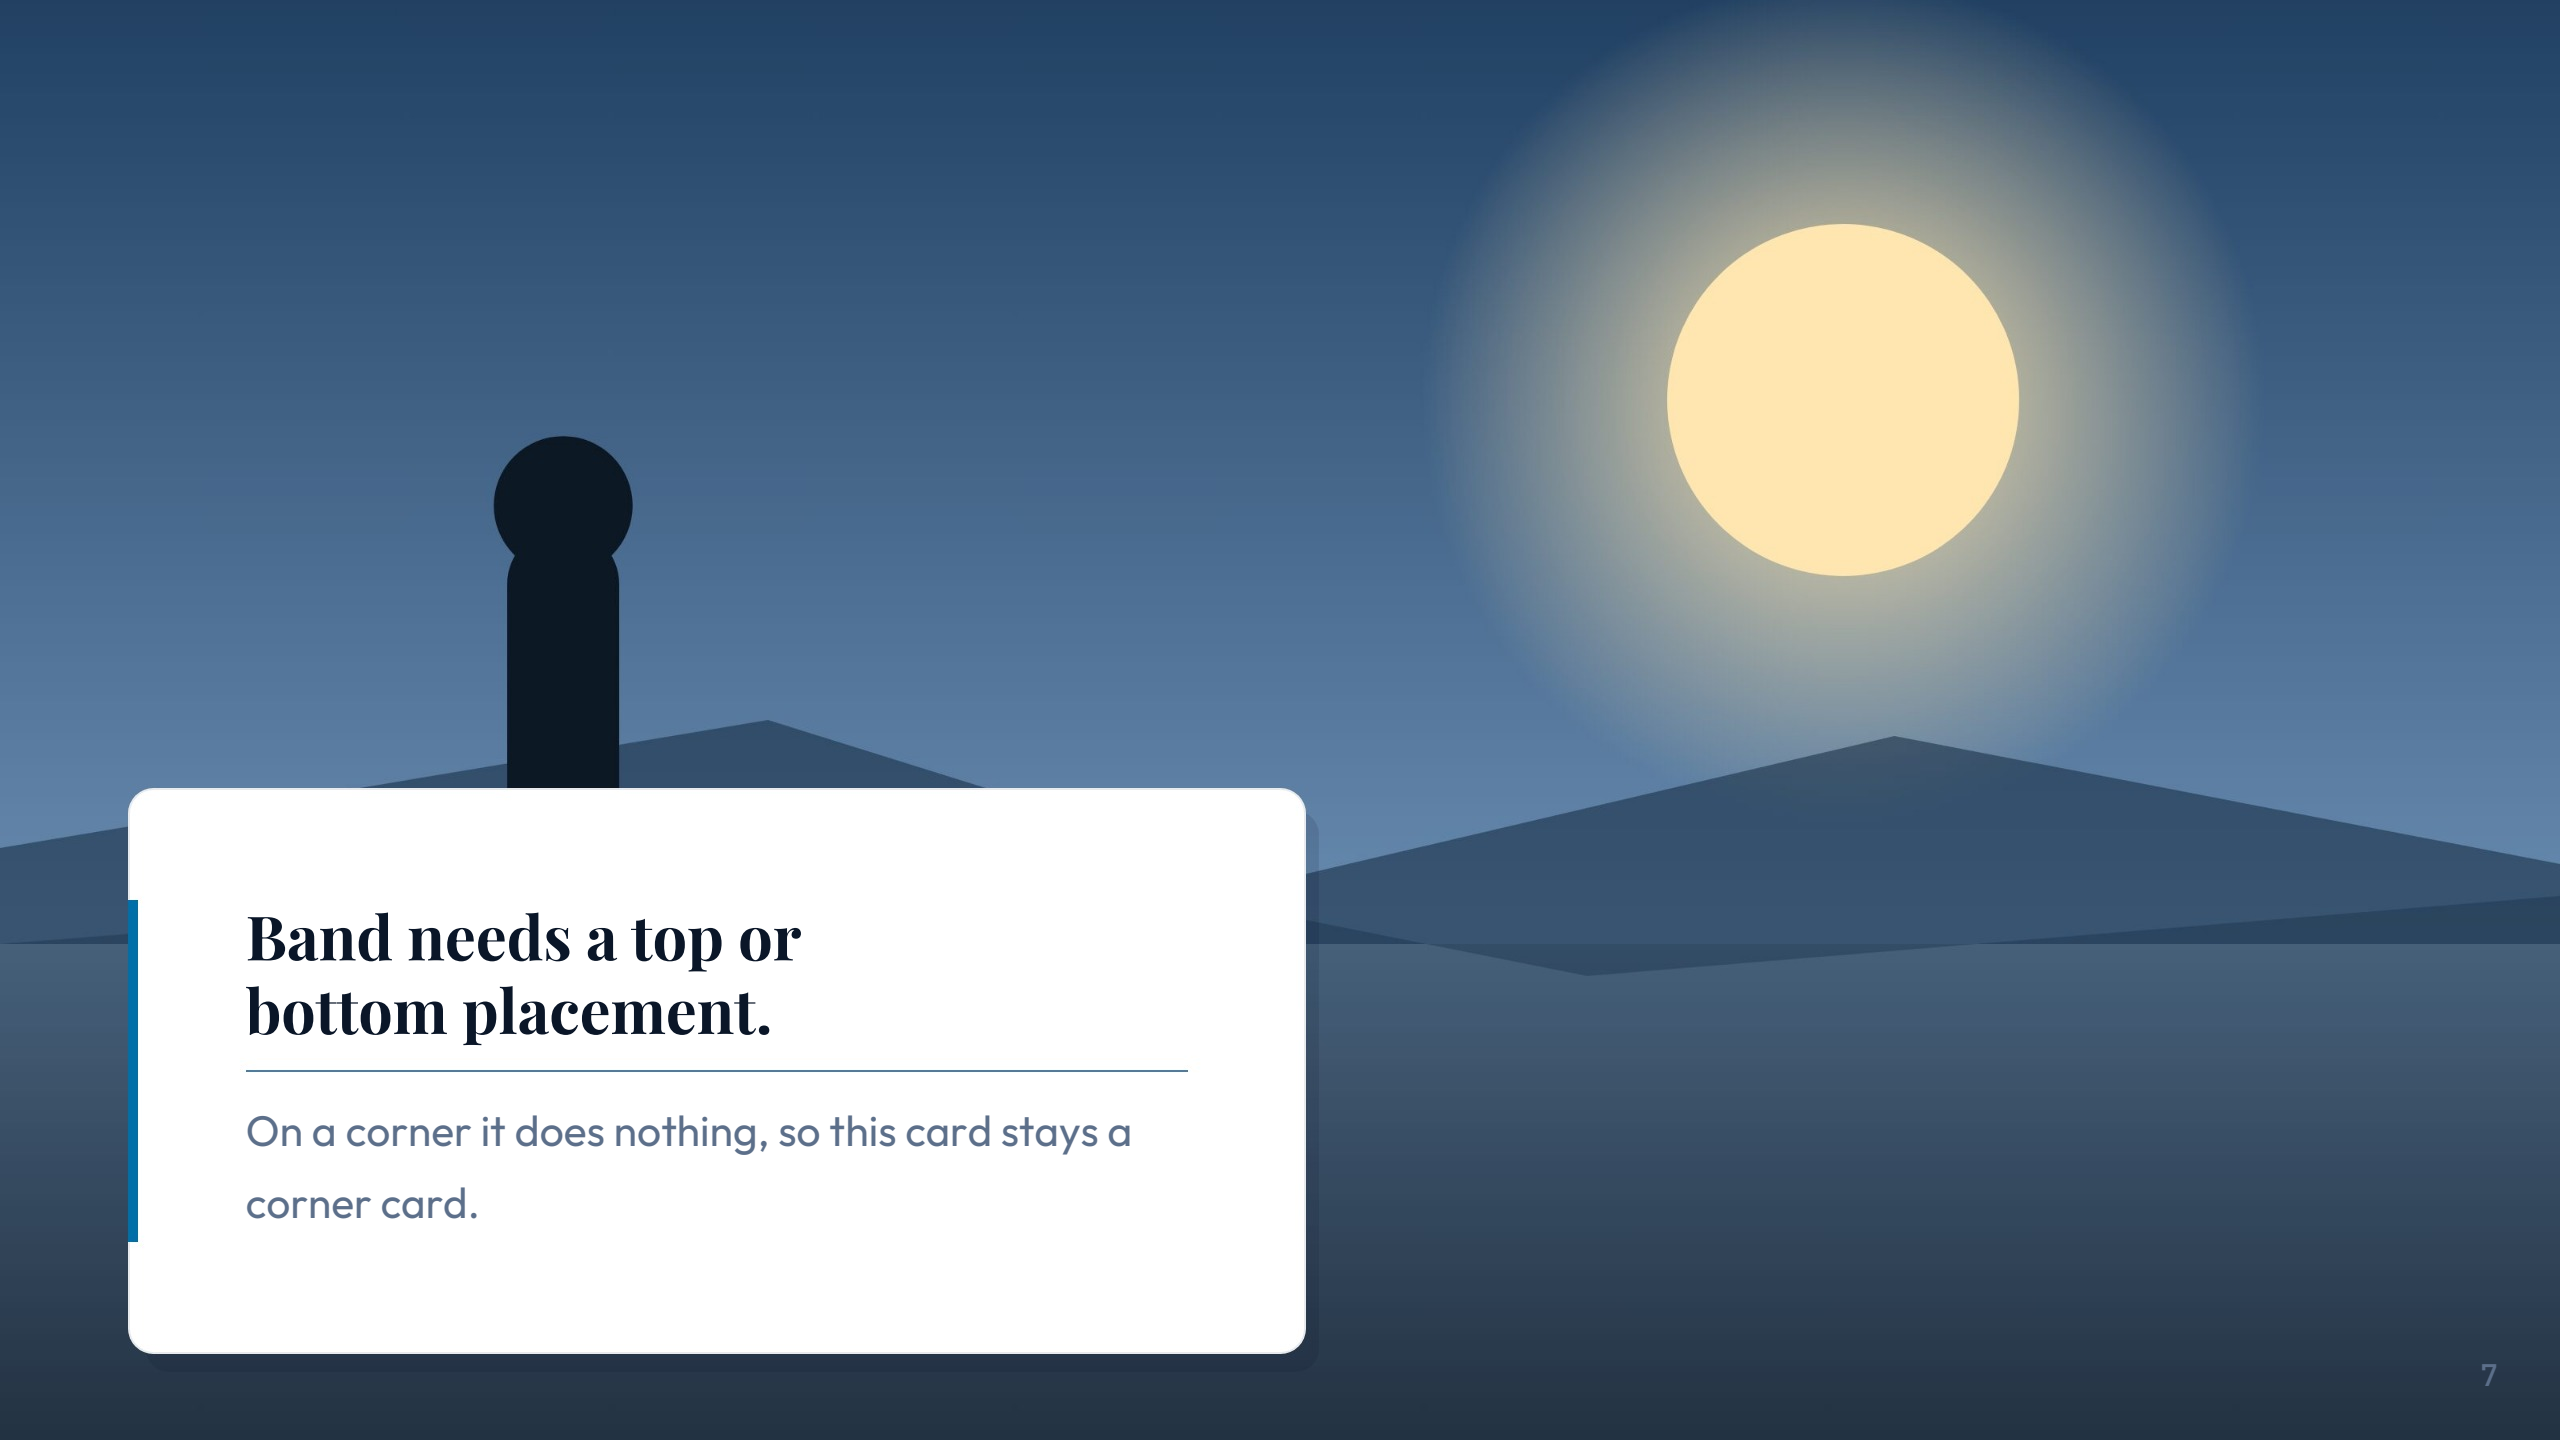

Small and compact for a quiet caption.

`card-sm` and `compact` tighten the strip further for a photo that has to carry the slide.

A heading alone fills the strip.

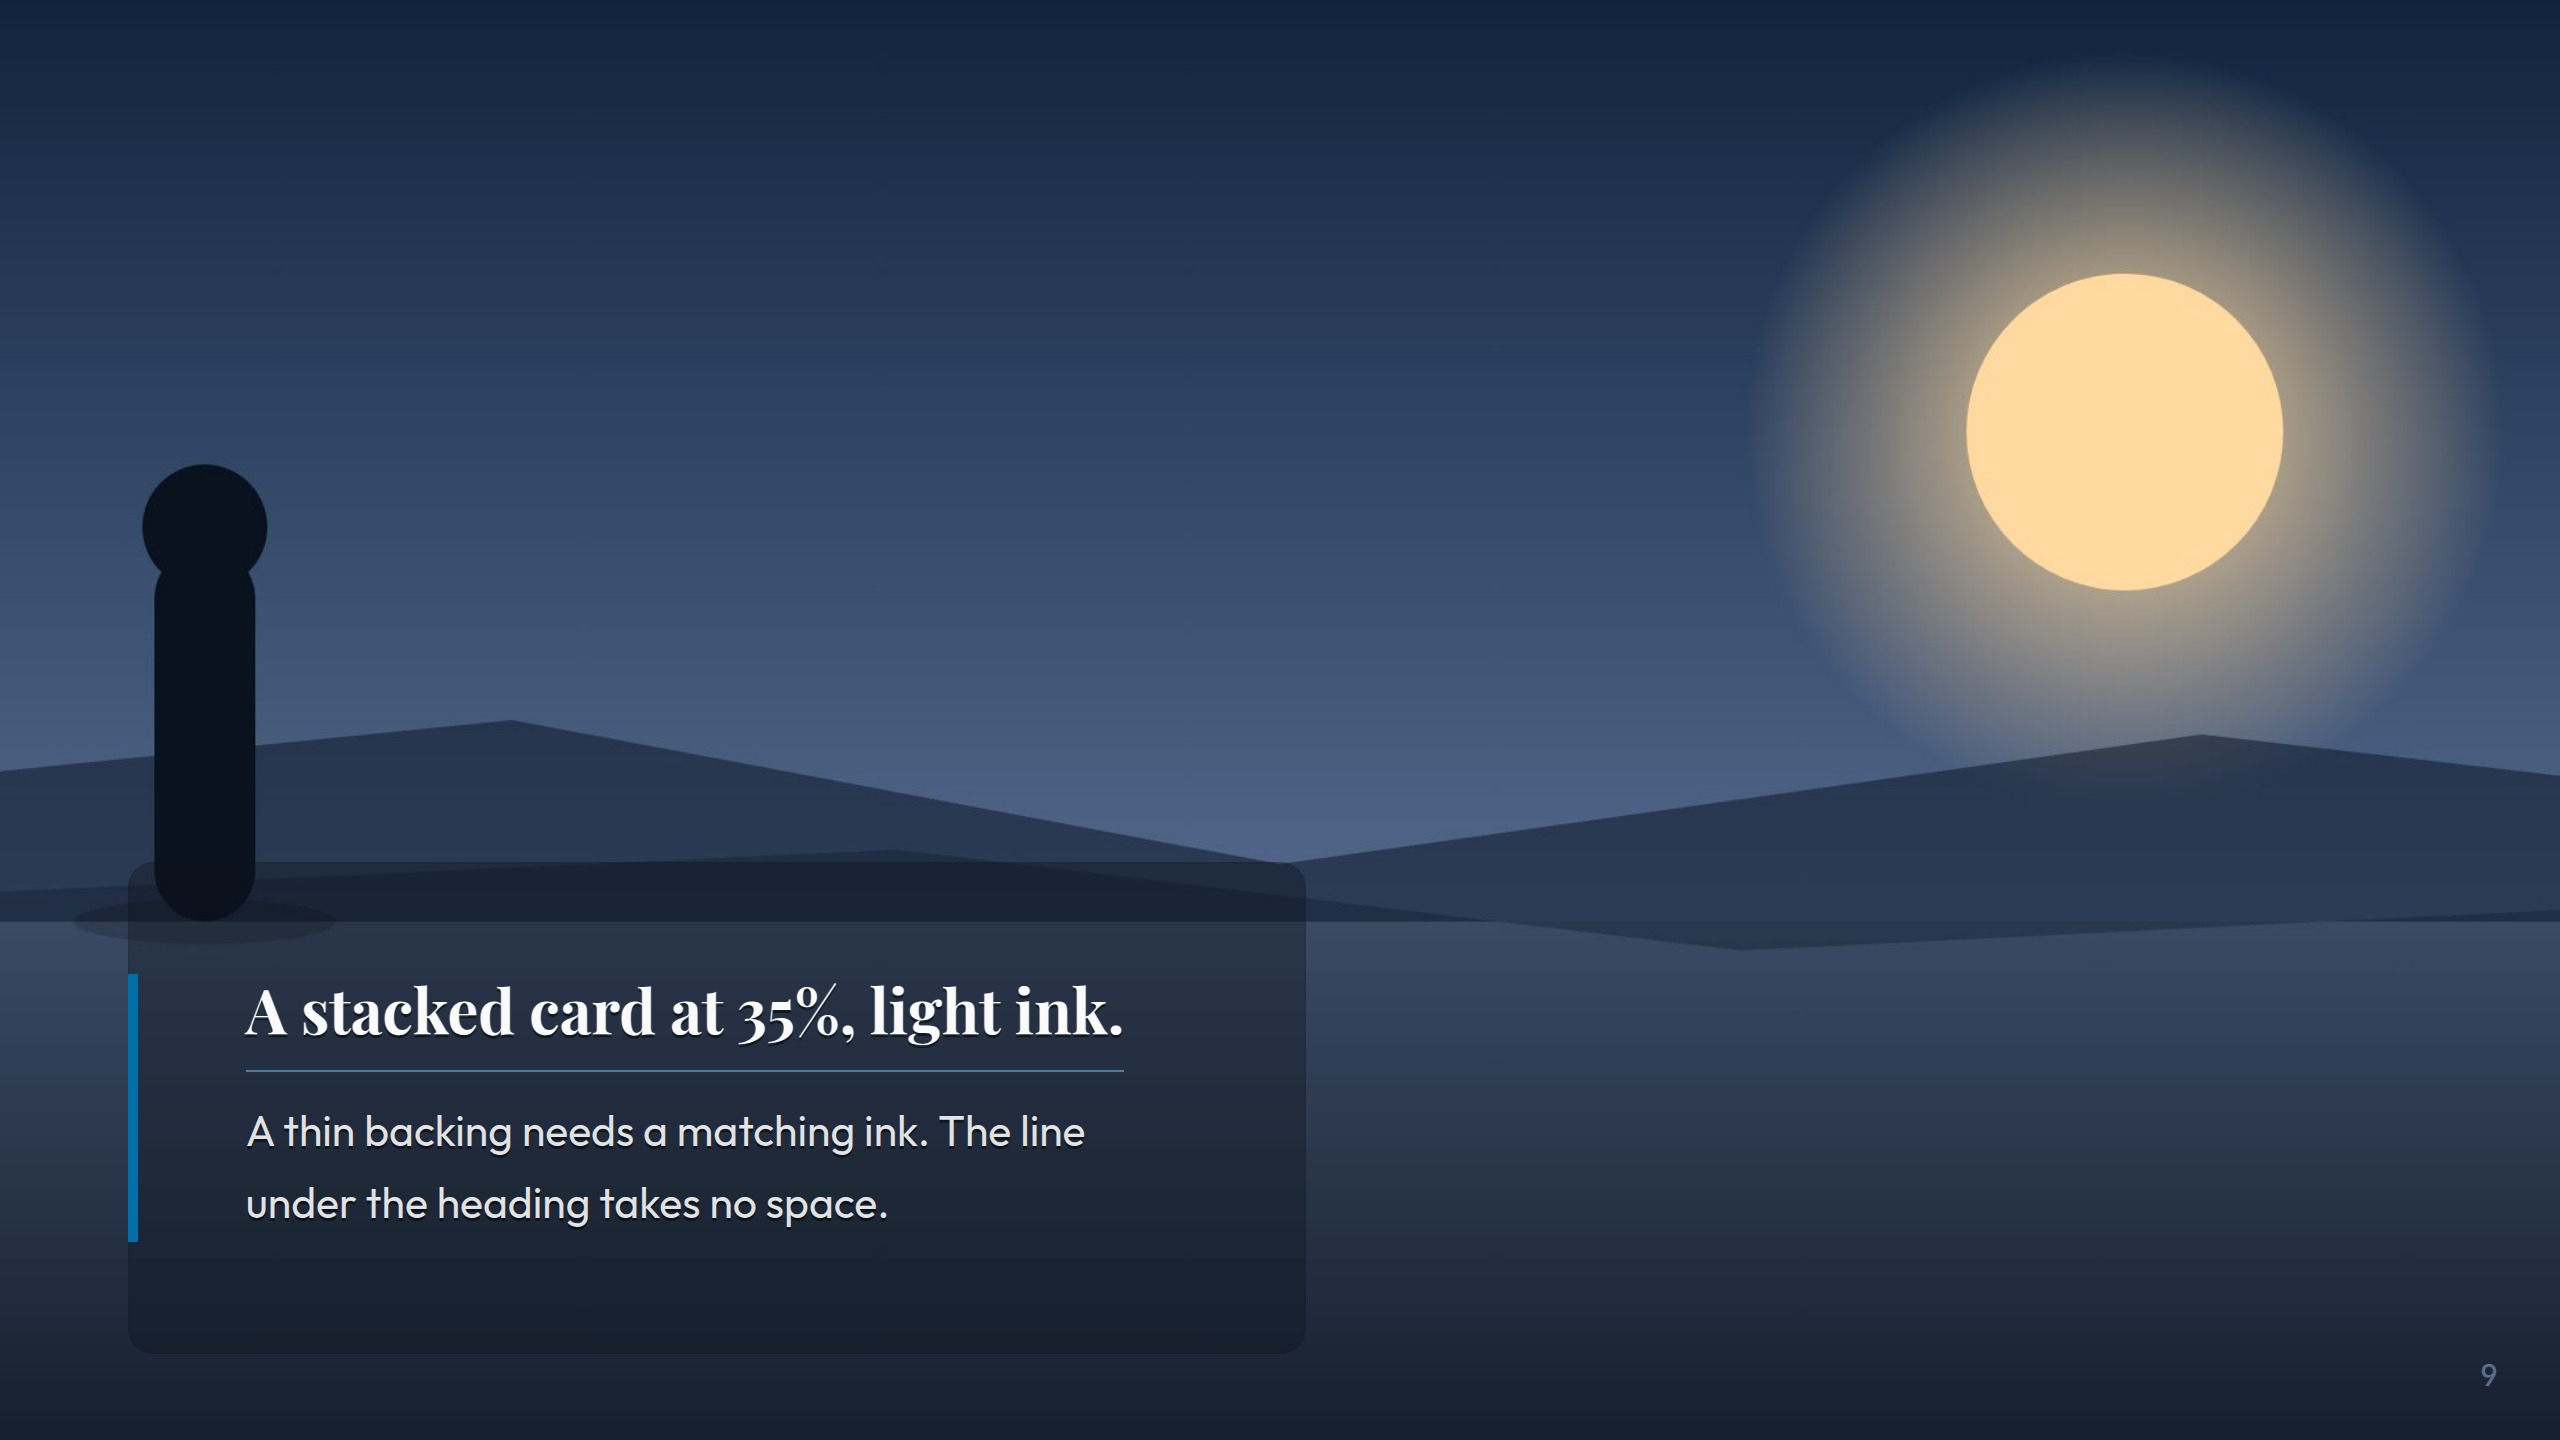

Band needs a top or bottom placement.

On a corner it does nothing, so this card stays a corner card.

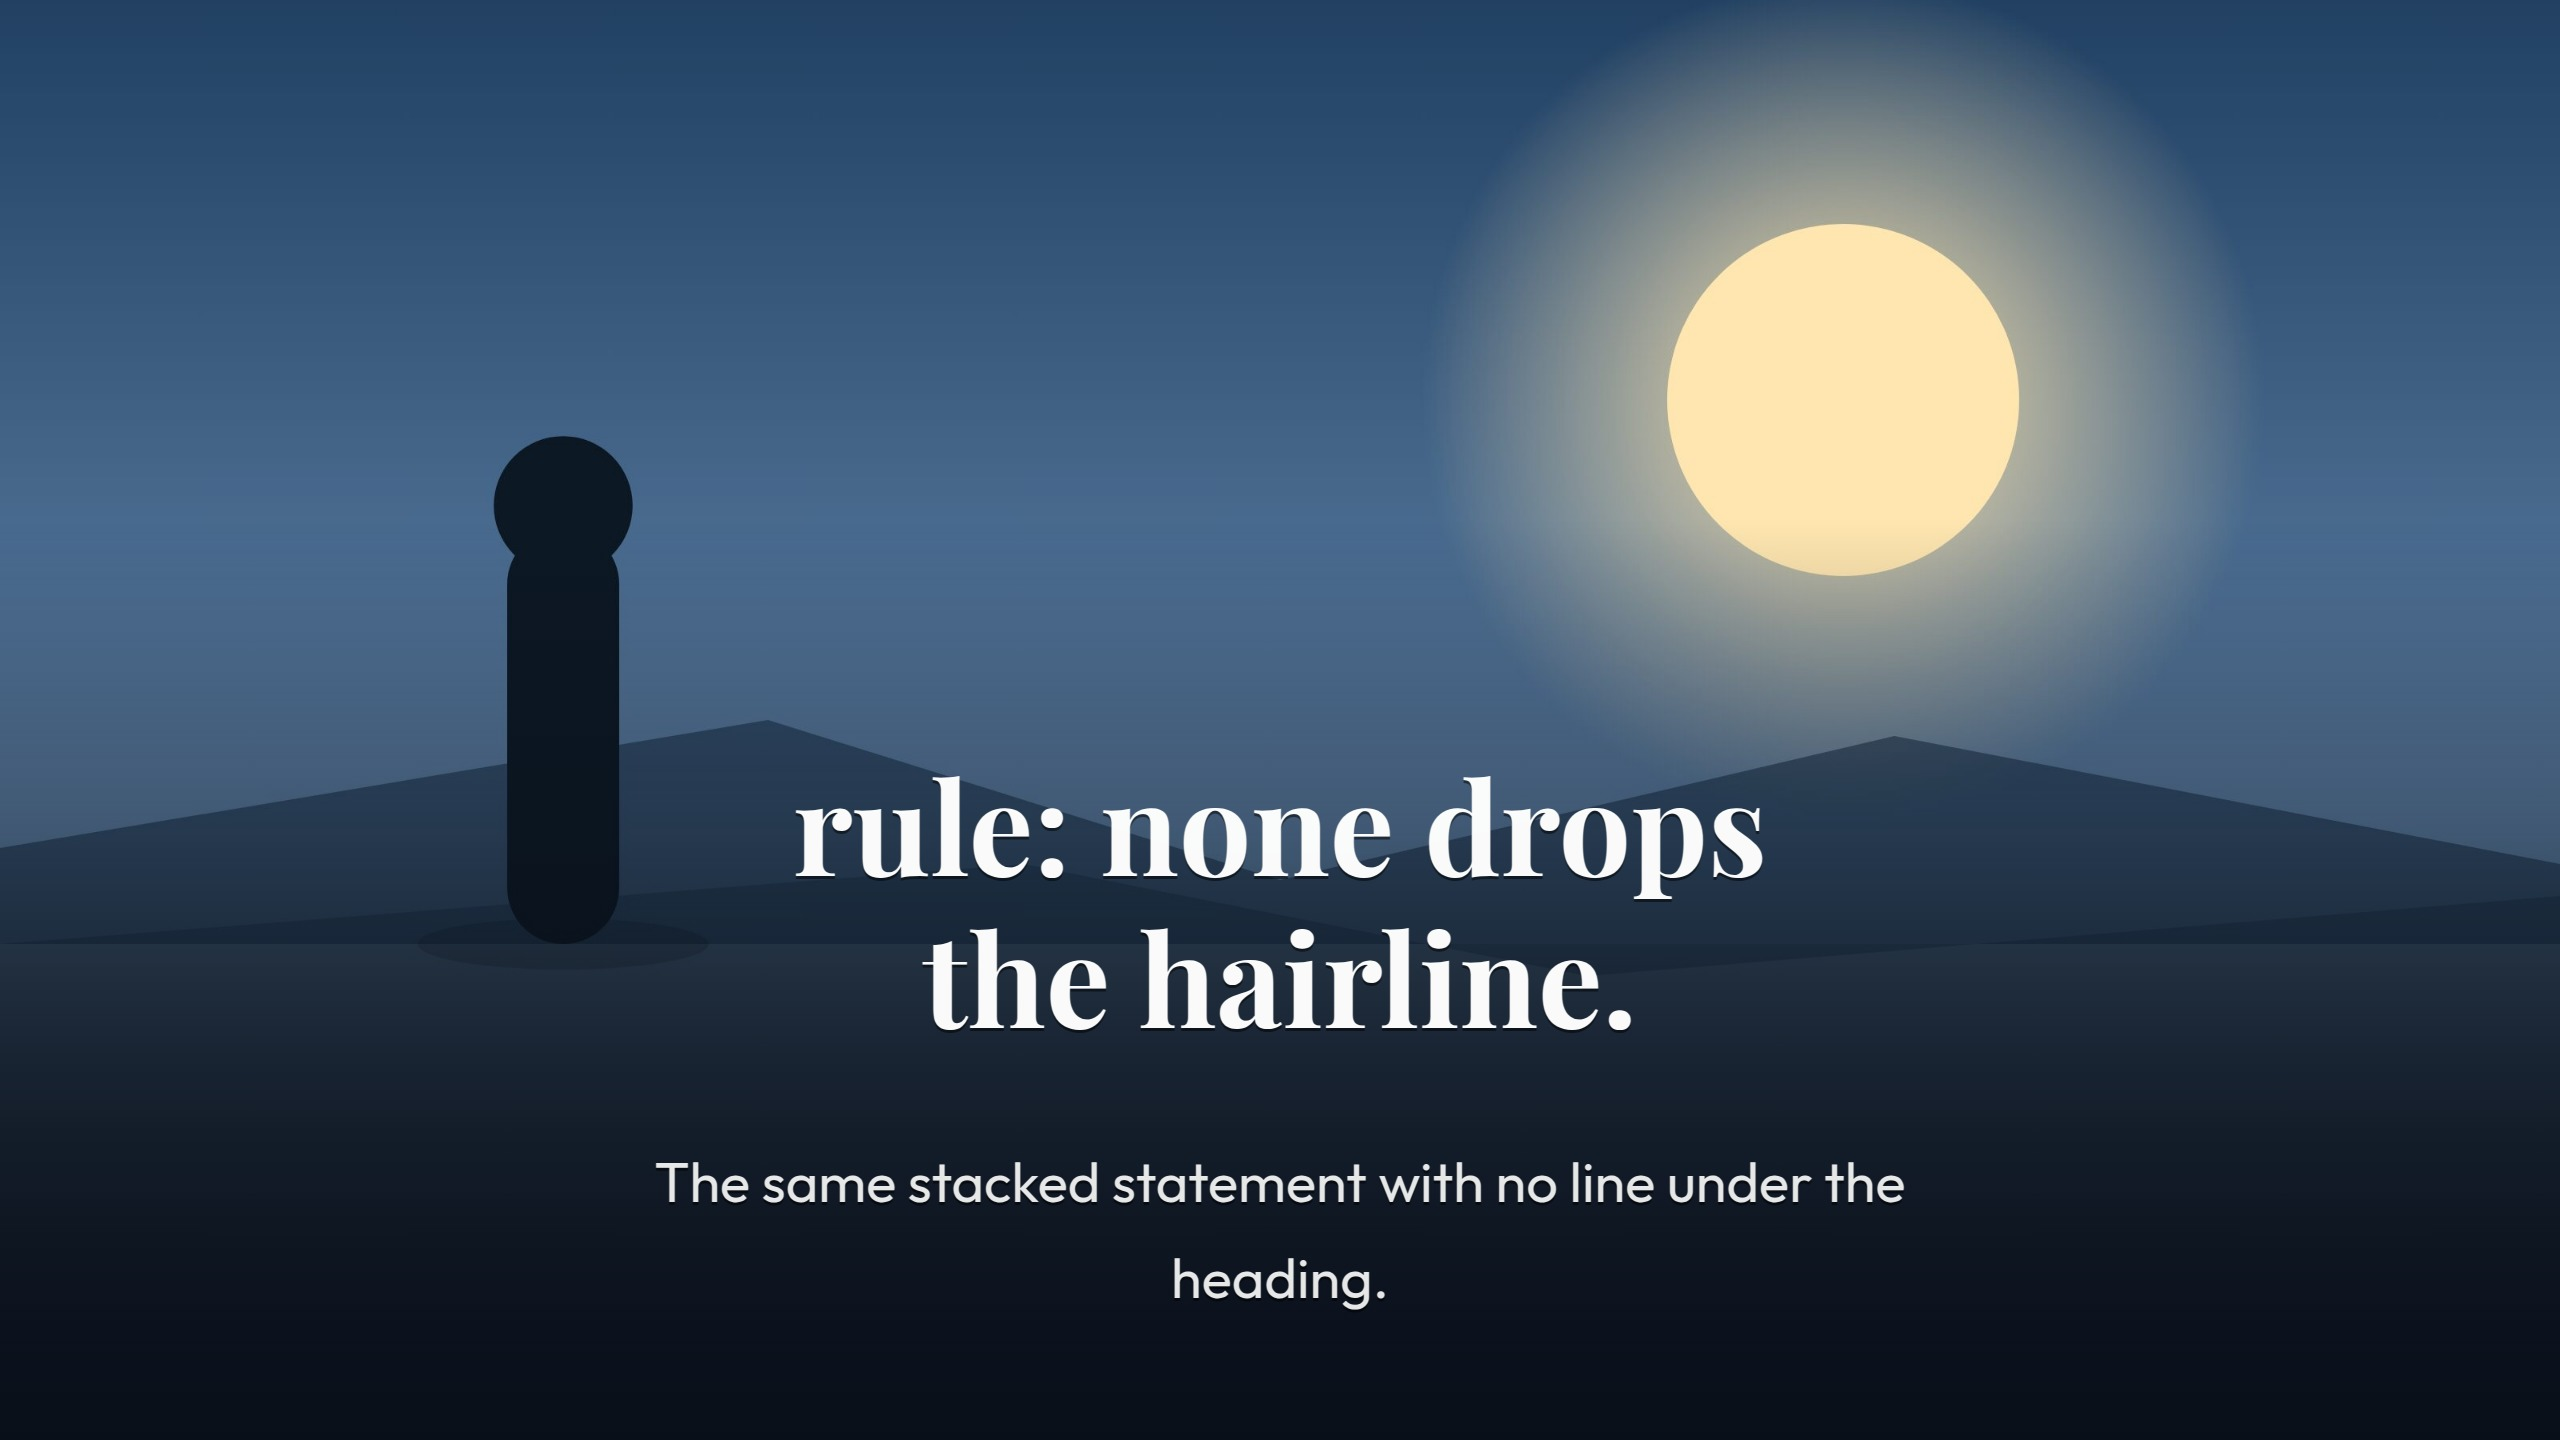

A band, 65% dark, spectrum trim on.

The divider follows the deck's spectrum: a quiet accent tint by default, the full gradient with `spectrum-trim`.

A stacked card at 35%, light ink.

A thin backing needs a matching ink. The line under the heading takes no space.

rule: none drops the hairline.

The same stacked statement with no line under the heading.
